

Dreamers On The Trail Of The Nez Perce: A Journey of Resilience, Strength, and Survival

The Nez Perce people are a Native American tribe from the Pacific Northwest. Their traditional lands were in the Wallowa Valley of Oregon. In the 19th century, the United States government forced the Nez Perce to relocate to a reservation in Idaho. The journey, known as the Nez Perce War, was a brutal and challenging experience for the tribe.

The Nez Perce War began in 1877, when the U.S. government ordered the tribe to move to a reservation in Idaho. The Nez Perce refused to leave their homeland, and they fought back against the U.S. Army. The war lasted for five months, and it ended with the Nez Perce being defeated. The tribe was forced to relocate to the reservation, and they lost much of their land and their way of life.
