4. The Star-Spangled Banner: Where History Unfolds

Fort McHenry, a historic military site in Baltimore, holds the honor of being the birthplace of the Star-Spangled Banner. During the War of 1812, this fort withstood 25 hours of intense bombardment by the British Royal Navy. Inspired by the sight of the American flag still flying over the fort after the smoke cleared, Francis Scott Key wrote the poem that would later become our national anthem. Fort McHenry is now a national monument, offering visitors a chance to relive this pivotal moment in American history.

5. The USS Constellation: A Floating Museum

Docked in Baltimore's Inner Harbor, the USS Constellation is the oldest commissioned warship still afloat in the U.S. Navy. This historic frigate played a crucial role in the War of 1812 and the Mediterranean slave trade. Today, the ship is open to the public as a floating museum, where visitors can step back in time and experience life aboard an early 19th-century warship.

6. The B&O Railroad Museum: A Journey Through Transportation History

Located in Baltimore, the B&O Railroad Museum is the oldest railroad museum in the United States. It houses an extensive collection of historic locomotives, passenger cars, and railroad memorabilia that tell the story of the development of rail transportation in America. Visitors can explore the museum's interactive exhibits, climb aboard real trains, and learn about the crucial role railroads played in shaping our nation's history.
